Not illustrated.1758 Excerpt: ... revenues and tht at present twa scholarships be established, and one sellowship next afterwards, as soon as the revenues will permit. We cannot but congratulate that learned seminary on this valuable addition to their wise institutions; at the fame time expressing our wishes, that we soon may see the study of physio established upon a footing no less promising. The difficulties attending this branch of science, we have heard lamented by many of the members of that society. Perhaps the sums unexpended of Dr. Ratcliffs princely donation, cannot be employed more to the credit of his memory, or advantage of the public, than in erecting an hospital--A work no less pious in its nature, than usesul to the county, city, and university of Oxford. But this is a point to be determined by the honourable trustees, if not by a higher authority. Art. 14. A plain Account of the Venereal Difftqfc; with the most fuccessful Method of Cute in its feveral Stages: by tuhich the Patient may know certainly, whether he hat this Difeafe or not; and in what State or Degree. With the various Forms in which an old Taint will/hew itself and the Difeafes it will bring on, or imitate.. Jackson. Pr. is. 6d.. Some hooks have been faid to smell strong of the lamp: this favours strongly of the quackish apothecary who distributes printed ssips of brown paper, at the corners of streets, warning passengers to avoid ignorant empiricks, and promifing a fase, %n4 speedy cure for the clap, without the expence of surgeons. It is indeed, whether we respect the authors theory or his practice, a very superficial, goffipping piece of intelligence; and we will venture to fay, that whoever shall, on the strength of this gentlemans recommendation, pretend to cure himself of a clap, by drinking an ins...
