Not illustrated. 1857 Excerpt: ...shes not proud; Not prouder than the swan is of the lake He has always swum in;--tis her element, And so she takes it with a natural grace, Ignoring tadpoles. She just knows, perhaps, There are men, move on without outriders, Which isnt her fault. Ah, to watch her face, When good Lord Howe expounds his theories Of social justice and equality--lis curious, what a tender, tolerant bend Her neck takes: for she loves him, likes his talk, Such clever talk--that dear, odd Algernon! She listens on, exactly as if he talked Some Scandinavian myth of Lemures, Too pretty to dispute, and too absurd. Shes gracious to me as her husbands friend, And would be gracious, were I not a Leigh, Being used to smile just so, without her eyes, On Joseph Strangways, the Leeds mesmerist, And Delia Dobbs, the lecturer from the States Upon the Womans question. Then, for him, I like him.. hes my friend. And all the rooms Were full of crinkling silks that swept about The fine dust of most subtle courtesies. What then I--why then, we come home to be sad. How lovely One I love not, looked to-night! Shes very pretty, Lady Waldemar. Her maid must use both hands to twist that coil Of tresses, then be careful lest the rich Bronze rounds should slip:--she missed, though, a grey hair, A single one,--I saw it; otherwise The woman looked immortal. How they told, Those alabaster shoulders and bare breasts, On which the pearls, drowned out of sight in milk, Were lost, excepting for the ruby-clasp! They split the amaranth velvet-boddice down To the waist, or nearly, with the audacious press Of full-breathed beauty. If the heart within Were half as white!--but, if it were, perhaps The breast were closer covered, and the sight Less aspectable, by half, too. I heard
