

Amelie and April Ascending (April and Amelie Stories Book 2)

Working with and loving Trinidad for the past few months had consumed Amelie's time but there were still days when she felt like she was shedding skin and she was filled with fear that she was dreaming of the life she was living. April had been away with her husband Smith and their son but was back home in Florida and Amelie craved to see her sister. More than anything she wanted April to see her; she was healthy and sober and felt she looked her best ever. The look on Trinidad's eyes in that moment proved it. Trinidad was still an internal man who didn't always express his feelings vocally but the way he looked at her, touched her and was taking care of her was all the proof she needed to know where his heart was. Why couldn't she feel as deserving? Jamie had bonded completely with April and Smith and at four understood as much as he could that April was her mommy and Amelie really his Aunt Amy. He had surprised them by saying, I know when he was told and running back to the beach. April and Smith had run their business away from home and distractions for months but it was time to be there. April looked around their home, a small smile on her lips. Smith was in the office and Jamie back in school and she realized it was good to be home. She felt healthy and strong and her meds were greatly reduced. She felt whole. Picking up the card, she read it again. April, I would love to see you. If you like we can meet somewhere or I can come there for a few days. I will stay in a hotel. I just need to have a conversation with you. Amelie. April realized she wanted to see her sister but there was a curl of fear inside and Smith made it clear he wasn't interested in seeing her and he was not ready for Jamie to see her. She wholeheartedly agreed. If Amelie wanted to see her, she had to come to her.
