

Hands Washing Water

Chris Abani poetry resonates with a devastating beauty which cuts through to the heart of human strength. Pride Hands Washing Water is Chris Abani fourth poetry collection a mischievous book of displacement, exile, ancestry, and subversive humor. The central section, Buffalo Women, is a Civil War correspondence between lovers that plays on our assumptions about war, gender, morality, and politics. Sweetest Henri, I know we promised to be honest, one to the other, but your recent missive, though welcome as any epistle from you, filled me with a dread that clung like dampness to wet wood. I am terrified for your immortal soul, dear sweet Henri. This mad war of Lincoln is infecting you with a sickness too depraved to even address. . . Abani's writing is ruthless, at times traumatic, and consistently filled with surprising twists and turns.
