Helen Cummings is young, twenty-five, but has already lived a life of adventure and excitement with a traveling circus. However, although she is one of the star attractions, she desires the one thing she's never experienced love. Covered in tattoos and not considered beautiful by the average man, she has almost lost hope that anyone could ever love one such as her. Everything changes when a friend shows her a mail order bride ad in a local newspaper, and she decides to answer it and take her chances at being chosen by a rancher in Texas. He hasn't requested beauty; he simply asks for a hard worker and kind woman. Knowing that she's both, although not a refined woman, she crosses her fingers and hopes for the best, telling almost no one about her plan. There was nothing attractive about her. This time he had really gone and done it. Now he was stuck with a giant of a woman and worse, he had gone ahead with the marriage ceremony. For Richard Davis, twenty-eight years old is a good time to marry. He's lonely and a recovered alcoholic, and since his reputation has ruined his chance to marry a local girl, he turns to the mail order bride system to find a potential bride. Not looking for perfection, he places an ad and hopes for the best. When he receives a reply from a simple, down-to-earth girl named Helen, he falls in love and begins making wedding plans immediately. However, her arrival is anything but exciting for him, as she's not what he believed her to be through no fault of her own. After falling off the wagon once, he resolves to try to work things out and starts a new life with the woman he said I do too. Even as he overcomes his initial impression, her silent strength warms his heart toward her and he starts envisioning his future with this unique woman. Can Helen find love and happiness or will her heart be broken again?
