

Our Old Home, Vol. 1 (Classic Reprint)

The years which Hawthorne passed in England were outwardly the most successful, in worldly prosperity the most abundant, and in other respects among the happiest of his life; forming in the autumn of his career a sort of counterpoise to the idyllic period spent at the Old Manse. Of these years, from the spring of 1853 to June of 1860, excepting a part of 1858 and 1859, which interval was chiefly spent in Italy, Our Old Home was the literary outcome. Much of the material composing the sketches in this volume occurs in embryonic form in the English Note Books, which were then still unveiled from publicity; but various elements and touches of fancy were supplied by the author's mood or memory at the instant of writing. His impressions of England, outlined in the Note-Books and scattered at random through many pages, here assume a connected and artistic shape. The articles embraced in Our Old Home were begun at The Wayside, Concord, in 1862, and were first published in the Atlantic Monthly, which was then edited by Mr. James T. Fields. Mr. Fields has placed on record, in his Yesterdays with Authors, the fullest memoranda now to be had relative to the production of these sketches.
