Excerpt from The Ophthalmic Review, Vol. 7: A Monthly Record of Ophthalmic Science

Last August I had occasion to needle for cataract in the case of a young girl of 14, Janet Maxwell, from Lochmaben, Dumfries. The vision was at the time of the operation reduced in both eyes to mere perception of light, corresponding to the existing condition, viz., dense complete cataract. She stated that her blindness had come on slowly after she was six years of age, and after she had begun to learn to read. Little more than a month afterwards a cousin of hers was admitted to the Royal Infirmary, under Dr. Argyll Robertson, and needled by him in October. In this patient, Jemima King, aged 16, cataract also began to develop at the age of six or seven years. The similarity in the history and condition of, as well as the relationship existing between, these two patients, caused me to institute an inquiry, which led to the discovery of the very marked hereditary predisposition to this form of cataract, which is shown in the annexed table. The facts were for the most part elicited at my request by my clinical assistant, Dr. George Mackay, whom I have to thank for the very thorough manner in which he collected them.
