Due but to one, and crowned with one crest.) Heleua meaus to say, that she and her friend were as closely united, as much one person, as if they were both of the first house; as if they both had the privilege due but to one person (viz. to him of the first house), the right of bearing the family coat without any distinguishing mark. Malone. /. /. 41 such an argument. Such a subject of light merriment. Id. I. 60. No, no, sir;--he will, &c The only difficulty in this passage arises from the words--he will, sir, which are omitted in the second folio. In that edition it runs thus: No, no, sir, seeme to breake loose; Take on as you would follow. But yet come uot: you are a tame man, go. This appears to me the true reading M. Mason. Mr. Malone reads,--No, no, hell--sir. P. 172, c. I, /. 40. curst; i. e. shrewish or mischievous. Id. 1.48.-how fond I am. Fond, l. e. foolish. Id. ...
