

Dead Secret (Arnold Landon Book 16)

There are two people who are very keen that the ancient woodland known as Pentire Woods should not be destroyed by a planned bypass. One is an archaeologist anxious to explore the woods peat bog after the discovery of the perfectly preserved and ancient body of the Wolf Man. The other is the landowner who is interested in neither progress nor heritage: he just wants his woods left alone. Brought in to assess the archaeological worth of the site, Arnold Landon and his colleague Portia have to walk a tightrope between the developers, the politicians and the inevitable eco protestors. But when one of the protestors is found dead, Arnold finds himself dealing not with a land dispute, but with murder. He also finds himself embroiled with Portia whose interest in him seems to be as political as the fate of Pentire Woods. Another fascinating new mystery in a series which mixes strong commonsensical prose with adroit archaeological know-how and impeccable historical research.
