Thy dying father comes upon my soul With that same look, with which he gave thee to me; I held thee in my arms a powerless babe, While thy poor mother with a mute entreaty Fixed her faint eyes on mine. Ah not for this, That I should let thee feed thy soul with gloom, And with slow anguish wear away thy life, The victim of a useless constancy. I must not see thee wretched. Ter. There are woes 111 bartered for the garishness of joy 1 If it be wretched with an untired eye To watch those skiey tints, and this green ocean; Or in the sultry hour beneath some rock, My hair dishevelled by the pleasant sea breeze, To shape sweet visions, and live oer again All past hours of delight! If it be wretched To watch some bark, and fancy Alvar there, To go through each minutest circumstance Of the blest meeting, and to frame adventures Most terrible and strange, and hear him tell them; (As once I knew a crazy Moorish maid Who drcest her in her buried lovers clothes, And oer the smooth spring in the mountain cleft Hung with her lute, and played the self-same tune He used to play, and listened to the shadow Here Valdez bends back, and smiles at herwildness, which Tereza noticing, checks her enthusiasm, and in a soothing half-playful tone and manner, apologizes for her fancy, by the little tale in the parenthesis. J IIir./-!f had made--if this be wretchedness, Ar. 1 if itilclcl it be a wretched thing I,) tricli out mine own death bed, and imagine I hat I hal Led, died u,t ere hit return! 7hen iee him hkeinng to my constancy. Or hover round, as he at midnight oft Su i on my grave and gazes at the moon; Or haply m some more fantastic mood, To be in Paradise, and with choice flowers Budd up a bow...
