Excerpt: ... the literary life of thingum bob, esq. late editor of the goosetherumfoodle by himself J-am now growing in years, and--since I understand that Shakespeare and Mr. Emmons are deceased--it is not impossible that I may even die. It lias occurred to me, therefore, that I may as well retire from the field of letters and repose upon my laurels. But I am ambitious of signalizing my abdication of the literary sceptre by some important bequest to posterity; and perhaps I cannot do a better thing than just to pen for it an account of my earlier career. My name, indeed, has been so long and so constantly before the public eye that I am not only willing to admit the naturalness of the interest which it has everywhere excited, but ready to satisfy the extreme curiosity which it has inspired. In fact, it is no more than the duty of him who achieves greatness to leave behind him, in his ascent, such landmarks as may guide others to be great. I propose, therefore, in the present paper (which I had some idea of calling Memoranda to serve for the Literary History of America), to give a detail of those important, yet feeble and tottering first steps, by which, at length, I attained the high-road to the pinnacle of human renown. Of ones very remote ancestors it is superfluous to say much. My father, Thomas Bob, Esq., stood for many years at the summit of his profession, which was that of a merchant-barber, in the city of Smug. His warehouse was the resort of all the principal people of the place, and especially of the editorial corps--a body which inspires all about it with profound veneration and
